Long-term relationships, a good network and local knowledge are important factors that contribute to successfully doing business in the Middle East. This also applies to the logistics sector, where you may be confronted with local regulations, political circumstances and a varying quality in infrastructure.

We invest in our knowledge and experience on a daily basis, something we would like to share with our customers. We have a close relationship with our branch office in Abu Dhabi, analyse the market, monitor the economic and political situations and observe the latest developments regarding regulations. Furthermore, we pay particular attention to Middle Eastern countries with sanctions.

Many Arab countries are focused on creating a diversified economy with the purpose of becoming less dependent on the oil earnings. In combination with the rising demand of the highly educated young population for food and agriculture related products this provides a lot of opportunities for the Dutch industry.
